STRANGE STORY OF PERSECUTION

The Charges of D. A. Jennings Against Many Prominent Citizens of Salem, Ind.

Plaintiff ays His Home and Business Were Wrecked, and That He Received Bodily Injuries.

If half the charges contained in the omplaint of D. A. Jennings against Eli W. Menaugh, and twenty eight other prominent citizens of Salem, Ind., are true, then the story of a most remarkable persecution is about to be told to the Federal Court of this district. The trial began to-day after a year's waiting. His business and home wrecked, his fam ily's affections allenated,libeled in his ene-mies' paper, expelled from the thirty-sec-ond degree Masons, his reputation ruined threatened with mob violence more than once and finally beaten into insensibility and dragged through streets and alleys and compelled to leave the city and State, broken both in body and mind—these are the results, briefly, of the alleged persecution for which Jennings asks $200,000 dam ages. He is here prepared for a bitter

Publisher of Salem Democrat.

Jennings is an Ohio man. He became a resident of Salem in 1887, as publisher of the Salem Democrat. Salem, he said, in his complaint, had made but little growth and by reason of intermarriage and business associations the people had become clannish and were able to control the organizations and institutions of the place. His first experience with the clan, he declared, was a demand that he furnish free cuttoness to its marriage. stationery to its members. He was finally coerced, he says, into this.

He was charged then with being intoxicated and tried before Justice Berkey, whom he declared was a party to the fraud and conspiracy to ruin his reputaion. Next he was charged with provoking an assault on Asa Elliott, one of the de-fendants, and again he was tried before rendants, and again he was tried before Justice Berkey and found guilty.

He was next found guilty before Berkey of a charge of cruelly treating his infant daughter—a charge which, he declared, was wholly untrue. He was soon after-ward bound over to the Circuit Court by ward bound over to the Circuit Court by Berkey on a charge of assaulting with intent to kill Asa Elliott, one of the defendants. In the Circuit Court, he said, a false finding against him was obtained brough the influence of the defendants. His persecutors, he declared, then took a fresh course by libeling him in an opening paper. One paragraph follows:

ROBINSON, Ill., December 2.-This city s excited over the taking away of James Dillard, the Indianapolis negro who was ynched by a mob at Oaktown, Ind. There is a division of sentiment. The evidence is conflicting. I talked to-day with many citizens. Some say that Sheriff Dudley, of Sullivan, Ind., who came after the negro for assaults on two white women was drunk.

The majority, including Sheriff House ton, say the Indiana sheriff and some of his deputies were drinking. They visited saloons, but they were not drunk. They were in a condition to know what they
